Rates are calculated by dividing the number of crimes by the population, then multiplying by 100,000. Percentages show the five year trend in crime rate. Crime rates control for differences in population, therefore, the counties are comparable. Percentage changes are determined by subtracting the crime rate in 1997 from the crime rate in 2001, then by dividing the total by the crime rate in 1997.

Rates are calculated by dividing the number of crimes by the population, then multiplying by 100,000. Percentages show the five year trend in crime rate. Crime rates control for differences in population, therefore, the counties are comparable. Percentage changes are determined by subtracting the crime rate in 1997 from the crime rate in 2001, then by dividing the total by the crime rate in 1997.
